The pseudonym "Popoca's Palabras" makes reference to the pre-Hispanic ideogram for word, and it is shaped like a volute or virgule. There are two ways to call this ideogram: "tlatoa" and "popoca". The first one, is a direct reference to "word", but in a venerable and religious way. For example, "tlatoani", the word for emperor means "the one who speaks while the rest is quiet". This hierarchies sense is not of my interest. The second one, "Popoca" on the contrary, allows to make an indirect reference to the word of smoke. For example, the name "Popocatepetl" which means "smoking mountain". This is the sense of may words.
